THE CONTEXT

Organisations today have been experiencing tremendous pressure to expand their reach and enhance/add-on services to the existing and new customers. The ever-increasing stress drives the business to grow but at the same time to restrict the overall cost. Growth of the managers and their role expansion is thus exponential with no waiting period to learn the dynamics of the new role. Adapting to new role and integrating with new capabilities like managing people, leading the team, shaping the new work culture is a big challenge to all growing organisations and is a part of their life cycle now. All this is happening so fast that companies have to look forward to structured interventions for keeping the entire process of role integration happy, quick and trouble free.

Additionally, new role integration and integration of human capital from two diverse cultures in the event of new alliances forming out of existing ones also throws a big challenge.

Another setback is the shrinking of mid-level roles with increased leadership roles as newer units are now being conditioned to work as a company by itself going beyond the concept of profit centre.
